

Credential recognition for female migrants—the pathway to a new job

Network "Integration through Qualification (IQ)"

Well-qualified female migrants offer great potential to the German economy and society. The current lack of skilled workers in many occupations makes such migrants an important target group for future recruitment.

Female migrants can improve their chances on the labour market by having their existing foreign qualifications/credentials officially recognised. During the recognition process, experts assess whether the foreign qualification is comparable with the German occupation. Whether a vocational qualification or an academic degree—having your qualification recognised will improve your chances of finding work in Germany that corresponds to your training. Depending on the job, recognition may even be a requirement for you to be able to practise your occupation in Germany. This is the case, for example, for doctors, teachers and nurses. However, whatever the occupation, recognition can boost your chances of finding work. It allows your employer to have a clearer understanding of what you learned in your country of origin, while increasing your chances of a higher salary and financial independence.

There is great interest in recognition. Between 2015 and 2018, almost 200,000 people obtained advice from the Network “Integration through Qualification (IQ)”. Women made up half of that number, which shows that they are every bit as keen as men to work. These women have already taken steps to have their credentials assessed and thus fulfil the requirement for obtaining work that corresponds to their training.

Many migrants in Germany are well qualified. Statistics show that 16 percent of women with a migration background have a higher education qualification. However, the figures also show that female migrants seek work less often than women without a migration background. In Germany, 59 percent of women with a migration background are in employment, compared to 75 percent of woman without a migration background. Furthermore, they are often engaged in marginal employment that does not correspond to their actual qualifications.

The step is worth taking.

“After obtaining recognition, I received many job offers.”

Laila Alim

Laila Alim’s experience demonstrates the value of credential recognition. Laila Alim came to Germany as a political refugee when she was 20 years old. She had previously completed training as a mid-wife and nurse in her home town in southern Afghanistan. However, she was unable to practise her occupation in Germany unless she obtained recognition. “As my work was very close to my heart, I actually wanted to begin the recognition process immediately. But my family commitments didn’t allow it.” For around 15 years, all her time was spent looking after her five children. “However, I never lost sight of my aim of working in Germany.”

In 2011, Laila Alim began the process of obtaining recognition for her mid-wife training. However, she was unable to complete the necessary compensatory measures for recognition because she could not find an apprenticeship near to where she lived. This was a bitter blow. “But I kept fighting!” she says, full of determination.

And soon enough a door opened. An employee at the Ministry of Health and Consumer Protection in Hamburg drew her attention to the alternative possibility of having her second qualification as a nurse and healthcare worker recognised. Initially, however, full equivalence was not granted. Laila Alim therefore participated in a one-year training programme supported by the non-profit organisation “passage” and carried out in cooperation with the University Medical Center Hamburg-Eppendorf. It was a difficult time. The numerous specialist terms, in particular, posed a huge challenge to Laila Alim.

“But I learned many new things, also because my training in Afghanistan was specially focused on female patients.”

After the 51-year-old had completed all modules as well as the practical parts of her training, she obtained recognition as a nurse and healthcare worker.

“I then received many job offers without having to apply everywhere! I had already assisted at my current workplace during the training programme,” says Hamburg-based Alim, for whom a lot has changed since then. “As a nurse and healthcare worker I am now respected more. And everyone is happy with my expertise.” Being able to complete the compensatory training programme in Germany means a lot to her and fills her with pride. “I enjoy working and am committed to my patients. My children are also now sufficiently grown-up that I am free to practise my occupation. I am also proud to be able to buy them nice things more often.”

Find an advice centre

This brochure will help you to find experts in your area who can assist you during the recognition process. You can find a list with advice centres throughout Germany at the end of this publication. Alternatively, you can look for an advice centre at www.anererkennung-in-deutschland.de, the official portal for the recognition of foreign professional qualifications. There you can find all relevant information in German, English and other languages. Even if you do not speak German or English: Come to an advice centre! We will find a way to communicate. Our services are free of charge.
