Professional recognition for electronics technicians – becoming a skilled worker

Network “Integration through Qualification (IQ)”
Industry and commerce are facing an increasing shortage of skilled workers in the electrical sector. Demand for individuals who have obtained a comparable qualification abroad is therefore increasing.

The dual education and training system in Germany is recognised internationally and is highly regarded around the world. Training is currently possible in 327 training occupations. Having a training qualification means being able to pursue qualified employment. For the economy, training also ensures skilled workers for the future. The training system therefore contributes to maintaining Germany's competitiveness and its prosperity. What makes German dual vocational education and training special in particular are its two learning locations. The specialist theoretical content is taught at vocational school, while practical knowledge is learned in the training company. This is why dual training is often referred to as company-based training.

In the dual occupations, a significant skilled worker shortage has become apparent over recent years. Almost one in two companies is unable to fill vacancies over the longer term as it cannot find appropriate workers. A glance at the training market reveals that the situation is becoming even more critical. Training numbers have fallen significantly over recent years both in industry as well as in the craft trade occupations. In 2017 alone, almost 50,000 training positions could not be filled.

Occupations in electronics and electrical engineering are now also among the so-called shortage occupations. More than 34,000 vacancies were registered with the Federal Employment Agency in January 2020 alone. If you are searching for a good job in this vocational field, you currently stand the best chance with recognition. In 2018, 543 applications for recognition as an electronics technician were made. This was the second highest number in the non-regulated sector. In electronics/electrical engineering there are several different specialisms which may come into consideration as a reference for you. The IQ recognition advice centre will help you to find the right reference occupation.

You will certainly need recognition of your training if you want to immigrate to Germany to work as an electronics technician.
Training opportunities are offered in the occupational field of electrical engineering/electronics in multiple training occupations in industry and in the craft trades. Choosing a training occupation involves not only a range of different training periods lasting from two to three-and-a-half years. The applicants are also deciding on future jobs, some of which may be more stationary, based in companies, or more mobile and located on construction sites. And the jobs also have a bearing on the various electro-technical systems. This starts with the equipment, e.g. from telecommunications and communications technology, to energy supply and communication networks, automation systems and infrastructure systems through to systems for energy generation and conversion.

The electronics technician specialising in energy and building technology is, for example, the most widespread of the electronic technician occupations in the craft trades. They install, service, and repair the power supply in residential and commercial buildings. If you train in this occupation, the chamber of skilled crafts is the competent authority for you.

The training occupation of electronics technician for industrial engineering is similar. This however belongs to the industrial electrical occupations and falls under the responsibility of the chamber of commerce and industry, where there is great demand for this occupation.

The industrial occupations of electronics technician for automation technology and mechatronics technician are focused on the construction, modification and maintenance of automation and industrial facilities. The mechatronics technician is also deployed in lift and escalator construction, as well as in servicing, for example.

IT system electronics technicians deal with communication networks and are trained in telecommunications companies, but also at municipal companies, such as utilities, and in engineering offices.

The large number of occupations offers good opportunities for finding the right reference occupation for your vocational education and training. The IQ recognition advisers will help you with this. You have then taken the first step towards recognition of your vocational qualification and of your vocational experience.
Industrial electrical occupations
- Electrical fitter
- Electronics technician for industrial engineering
- Electronics technician for automation technology
- Electronics technician for devices and systems
- Electronics technician for building and infrastructure systems
- Electronics technician for information and system technology
- Aircraft electronics technician
- Mechatronics technician
- Electronics technician for machines and drive technology (industrial and craft trades) IH (commerce and industry) and HW (crafts trades)
- IT system electronics technician

Craft trade electrical occupations:
- Electronics technician specialising in energy and building technology
- Electronics technician for automation technology
- Electronics technician for telecommunication technology
- Electronics technician for machines and drive technology, IH and HW
- Systems electronics technicians
- Information electronics technicians

Why should you have your vocational qualification recognised?

It is currently possible to train in 327 dual training occupations. Dual occupations in Germany are not regulated. This means you do not necessarily need recognition to work in your occupation. However recognition gives you lots of benefits:

- If you want to immigrate to Germany you must have your vocational qualification recognised.
- Your boss must only have electrical systems and equipment worked on by a trained electrician or under the supervision of a trained electrician person.
- A notice of equivalence is an official document which confirms that your foreign qualification is equivalent to the reference occupation.
- The chances of employment increase in line with your qualification. In most cases this also influences what you are paid.
- A notice of equivalence also enables you to participate in upgrading training. This gives you even more career opportunities.
- If you wish to work on a self-employed basis in the craft trades, you need equivalence to be established. And you need to be entered in the Register of Craftsmen.

Paths to recognition

Recognition in the dual occupations in the occupational field of electrical engineering/electronics is regulated in the Federal Professional Qualifications Assessment Act. On this basis, the competent authority for the recognition checks whether the foreign vocational qualification is equivalent. There are a range of possible options:

• (1) Equivalence assessment via document analysis: The competent authority checks whether substantial differences exist between the vocational qualification from abroad and the German reference occupation. The nature of the differences may be to do with content, form or duration. (2) Equivalence assessment via inclusion of vocational experience: If the document analysis reveals substantial differences between the vocational qualifications, the competent authority checks whether the capabilities can be demonstrated in other ways. This may be continuing education and training or additional training, or even vocational experience.

• Equivalence assessment via a skills assessment: If the documents are not sufficient for the competent authority, or if insufficient information is available, the vocational skills, knowledge and capabilities can be compared with the domestic vocational training. The skills analysis may take place using work samples and professional discussions.

What might substantial differences be?
Frequent substantial differences relate to legal aspects and technical standards. Or content in the German occupational profile may be missing. It might also be the case that company-based training elements are missing because the foreign training was carried out at school.

If no substantial differences are established compared to the vocational qualification of electronics technician, then you receive notice of equivalence.

“GOOD TO KNOW”

If recognition seems unlikely, there are other ways of using your qualifications in employment. For example you can sit an external examination. The requirement is usually that you are able to demonstrate vocational experience over a period lasting one-and-a-half times that of the training. For occupations which are frequently requested, courses may be available which will prepare you for the final examination.

Use advisory services
Network IQ advisers clarify whether recognition of your training as an electronics technician is likely to succeed. They check your documents and help find the relevant competent recognition authority for your occupation and location. If the recognition procedure is unlikely to succeed, they will help you find alternatives.

Submit an application
The advisers can also help you to prepare the documentation to apply for recognition. You are normally required to provide employment references and qualification certificates. The procedure involves a fee. In some cases, the German state may provide financial assistance. IQ advisers can also help you with this.

The recognition centre checks your documents
The competent authority checks your documents and determines whether your foreign qualification is equivalent to the German qualification. This may also involve requests for additional documentation. The procedure usually takes three months.

You receive your assessment notice
You receive your assessment notice. If there are no substantial differences, you receive notice of equivalence. If substantial differences are identified, you receive notice of partial equivalence. This also shows which qualifications you already have and those you still need. Network IQ offers refresher training which can be used to compensate for substantial differences. Once you have completed the training, you can then submit a follow-up application.

Become a skilled worker!
IQ supported Eric Appiah successfully through the recognition procedure and refresher training

Back home in Ghana, Eric Appiah had worked for a long time as a self-employed electrical fitter. At the end of 2014, he arrived in Saarland wanting to start a new life both privately and professionally. For Eric Appiah, this was the beginning of a long road which ultimately led to permanent employment. Following many applications, he found a position as a temporary assistant with the Saarbrücken-based company f-tronic. He quickly realised he wanted a job that was in line with the level of his qualification. At an information event hosted by saaris saarland.innovation&standort e. V., Eric Appiah heard for the first time about the recognition for foreign vocational qualifications. Intensive consultations then followed with the recognition advisory services provided by saaris and by the Saarland Chamber of Skilled Crafts. In January 2016, he had gathered the documents he needed for the equivalence assessment and made the application. Shortly afterwards he received notice of partial recognition. In order to obtain full recognition, Eric still needed to compensate for the substantial differences which had been identified. Once again, with support from saaris, he was able to attend three refresher training programmes at the Saarland Chamber of Skilled Crafts. Eric Appiah received the full support of his employer from the very start. He was given leave for the training periods. In the company, his range of work opportunities increased. In June 2017 Eric Appiah received full recognition. He was promoted to skilled worker status in his company and has been working since then in the production department. “My life is better now. Recognition certified for me what I had learned in my home country. This has provided me with much greater opportunities to be employed in line with my qualification,” he says, grateful for the support he has received.

The interview with Eric Appiah was conducted in February 2018. He was advised and supported in the recognition procedure by the Saarland Chamber of Skilled Crafts in its capacity as the competent authority, by saaris saarland.innovation&standort e. V. within the scope of the sub-projects for the utilisation of foreign qualifications (SEAQ), and by the training agent for dual occupations at the Network IQ Saarland.

Eric Appiah’s full success story is available in eleven languages at: https://www.anerkennung-in-deutschland.de/html/de/erfahrungsberichte_elektroniker-appiah.php
In Tunisia, Tariq had completed two-years of school-based training as an industrial electronics technician. He also had 10 years of vocational experience when he immigrated to Germany in 2012. Tarek K. initially worked for a temporary employment agency as an assistant in the electrical sector. He took his first step towards qualified employment by submitting an application for recognition of the training. The reference occupation is electronics technician specialising in energy and building technology. Since he no longer has any documents providing evidence of the content of his training or his vocational experience as an electronics technician, a skills analysis is conducted in March 2017. On the basis of this, he receives notice of partial equivalence from the Düsseldorf Chamber of Skilled Crafts. It is also recommended to him that he contacts the IQ Project “Refresher and second-chance training in dual system occupations” [Anpassungs- und Nachqualifizierungen in den Berufen des dualen Systems]. Stefanie Schmoll, the training tutor, prepares a training plan for him. Specialist support for this is provided by the Düsseldorf Guild of Electricians which is responsible for the inter-company trainee instruction (ÜLU). The six modules correspond precisely to the deficits identified in the notice of equivalence. Tarek K. completes all six modules and is actively supported in this by IQ training support. Once Tarek has completed his final course in January 2019, he works together with Stefanie Schmoll to submit a follow-up application for recognition to the Düsseldorf Chamber of Skilled Crafts. By 5 February he has already received notice of full equivalence. And in the same month he begins working for a temporary employment agency which places him with an electronics company in Duisburg. Here, they quickly recognise his expertise and take him on as a skilled worker in a permanent position. Today his gross salary is double what he was earning before as an assistant. This success encourages him to undertake further training in consultation with his boss.
Here we introduce two IQ projects relating to refresher training for the dual occupations, including electronics technician.

Network IQ North Rhine-Westphalia - Centre of excellence for the vocational recognition of foreign qualifications in the dual system based at the Cologne Chamber of Skilled Crafts.

You already have notice of partial equivalence which lists both the existing qualifications and the existing deficits. You want to achieve full professional equivalence as an electronics technician. The centre of excellence compensates for these deficits using the general training plan and prepares an individual training plan for you. The centre helps you to find the right company where you can learn and refresh the practical content. At the same time, the right refresher and second chance training activities are identified which the person seeking recognition is required to attend. The goal is to compensate for the theoretical and practical substantial differences so that full equivalence as an electronics technician can be achieved.

The centre of excellence is also able to offer this support for the other skilled craft occupations.

IQ refresher training – Chamber of Skilled Crafts for the Stuttgart region

Most people entering Germany from the skilled electrical occupations apply for equivalence to the Chamber of Skilled Crafts for the Stuttgart region in its role as competent authority. In order to compensate for any identified substantial differences, the IQ subproject advises and prepares a training plan providing information on the type and duration of the recommended refresher training. The training plan is prepared in close cooperation with the Electrotechnology Centre, Stuttgart (ETZ) which plays an important role in the delivery of electrical training in the electrical skilled trades in the Stuttgart region. The ETZ provides training on all the content of the general training plan for electronics technician in its training courses. The IQ project also helps you find financial support for the training. The project employees are constantly developing their contacts with the authorities to reflect the requirements of those seeking recognition. The all-round support ultimately also includes the fact that the Chamber of Skilled Crafts for the Stuttgart region makes the decision on the follow-up application and presents the successful outcome to the applicant in the form of full equivalence as an electronics technician.
